Beacon Data Privacy Statement

At this year's The Liver Meeting® we are utilizing wearable beacon technology to help AASLD continue to provide you with the highest level of education and content. We understand that attendees want a more personalized experience, and the only way for our event marketing team to gain the knowledge required to achieve this is through sophisticated event technology. Beacon technology and data analytics will provide us with this level of detail.

Each attendee will have a small beacon on the back of the badge unless you choose to opt-out. The TurnoutNow wearable beacon is a small wireless device that broadcasts a unique signal using Bluetooth Smart technology. To capture the unique signal TurnoutNow will deploy small receivers that listen for the beacon signals and transmits them to their cloud for processing. The data we are capturing will be used for the following purposes to aide us in a deep learning exercise about this year's event.

- Aid the events team in making decisions in real-time to affect the experience (for example, AASLD can use the data to detect large volumes of foot traffic in a particular session and bring in extra resources to facilitate the session)
- Determine traffic patterns throughout the event venue only
- Track for CME certifications, room capacities, and speaker engagement

- To inform future event programming and enhance the overall Liver Meeting® experience

No personally identifiable information or individual data is shared or sold to any outside parties, and TurnoutNow has no rights to use or retain any personally identifiable information or individual data except as necessary to provide services to AASLD.

More information about TurnoutNow's privacy practices can be found here:
